Colleagues – My colleagues are all the people I work with daily, these include my peers who manage other teams, my staff within my team and senior managers.. My peers who manage other teams require that we have open communication between the teams and that we complete tasks as scheduled. This is to ensure we have no overlap in work and a full understanding of each team’s responsibilities ...

For many of us, the instinctual answer to that question is “No, it is natural for me to privilege my own needs before those of others.” That’s a perfectly valid response. While many societies these days are moving towards an emphasis that we should put the feelings of others before our own, there is also a growing “self-care” movement that encourages us to put our own feelings first.

Saying “no”, if you are a people-pleaser. Some of us are hardwired with the need to say yes all the time which puts us in hard situations at times. When it is about either meeting your needs or pleasing others, you find yourself in a tricky situation. You are afraid of being rude and you want to help because you are a kind soul.

10 Ways To Meet Your Needs And Make Other Happy

We all need someone to be there for us, even if they are just in prayer. Keep your heart open so that you can see others the way God does. Reach out to people you feel led to. Don't let harsh words discourage you, keep looking to God and keep your trust in Him.

Meeting the Needs of Others

Success is not about you; it requires others. You need to help others reach their dreams if you want to reach yours. You need to connect to their memories, their desires. That means a rule like, “Do unto others as they would have you do unto them.”—the rule a wise father followed when he selected a mentor for his son over 2,300 years ago.

Do You Focus on Your Needs or the Needs of Others ...

We don’t learn to pay much attention to our needs, beyond the basics of food, water, and shelter. Television advertisements, popular culture, and the desires of others dictate our “needs.” But I’ll bet that, on a soul level, you don’t need a cooler car, a bigger ring, whiter teeth, or more parties. What do you need then? Answering this question can be one of the most powerful transformations of your life.
